I researched the Health & Human Services website (rabies fact sheet) and also called the agency to inquire if testing is done on animals with non-exposure. Nothing I found indicated it would be done. Health & Human Services did call back and advised they do not test animals for non-exposure, and that a person could have the animal (bat) tested at their own expense. I called CARROLL and left her a message of our findings, and that she could also look in the yellow pages for a company to remove nuisance pests.
